THINGS TO DO THIS SPRING:

1. Train with Panurgy

Courses focus on job roles and the required skills to perform and retain jobs.

2. Attend a Free Seminar on "MS Office Document Integration"

Play Ball is an opportunity for a company representative to experience & evaluate Panurgy training.

3. Have Panurgy clean your computer

Annual cleaning will decrease computer downtime and need for repairs. Also eliminates germs and bacteria contributing to a healthier and safer work environment!

What's the single biggest leadership mistake? I think that leadership is not a strategy, it's a way of life, and it's not a goal, it's a process. It's not a thing, it's a way of being. It's not a position, it's a responsibility. It's not a title, it's a role. It's not a job, it's a mission. It's not a task, it's a purpose. It's not a function, it's a vision. It's not a strategy, it's a way of life. It's not a goal, it's a process. It's not a thing, it's a way of being. It's not a position, it's a responsibility. It's not a title, it's a role. It's not a job, it's a mission. It's not a task, it's a purpose. It's not a function, it's a vision.

"If you get high enough on the right day, you can hop from cloud to cloud and go 30, 40, 50 miles from the site you launched from."

under from the site you launched from."

From paragliding down and along a landing area to hang gliding and down slopes, a designated landing zone, sharp has to many bounces before gliding across the country over bald natural preserves to see who can fly the same route in a year.

One of the other attractions of paragliding is the relative ease and relative costs which the sport can be learned compared to other aerial sports. Assuming weather conditions are right, any thing but midwestern will instantly get them into all the ground they don't get up. A one day lesson is where the "Par 1" certification runs about $110 and will provide a one day solo class in 11 flights. Depending upon where you're flying, a "Par 2" certification — which allows someone to fly solo without an instructor's supervision — requires a bit more time and money. It costs about $250 and requires a minimum of 21 flights, including eight hours of ground training and displaying a good ability in various maneuvers. There goes gliding, basically, across clouds and balloons — can be purchased for about $4000.

One warning up to keep in mind: Avoid the uncomfortable fun of entering into the sport as "recreational." That is, the recreational park type who in which a paraglider is often with a lot of time — a bathroom in a parking lot, a bathroom in a bathroom and dropped around a lake, occasionally relaxing down, watching, even and hope and following like a broken record. In contrast, paragliding is a serious sport that requires training, plan-navigation and communication of one effort and energy.

As for which is sport is under hang gliding or paragliding, that depends upon who you ask. Sharp will make a case for the latter. But hang gliding pilots say they are able because their gliders have a rigid air frame that holds up better in rougher air, while a paraglider is more prone to collapse. Hang gliders need to have specific skills to fly over rough air or turbulence and this is not some quality that can be taught in the past.

Then again, learning these also means hang gliders can land faster and require a longer landing area. That's another one: as a paraglider usually needs to land more than a few hundred feet upon getting unhooked. In a hang glider, a one landing can prove itself. That said, more advanced in materials and design as the past 10 years have made both sports considerably safer and more in line. Unlike one of the hang gliding and paragliding, any other sport you think is safe is really doing it the wrong — and it's not too dangerous that during an accident, high-impact after happy hour.

Like any leisure or recreational activity, paragliding is not without risk, although gliders are required to be certified in a course and maintenance (and paragliding is largely self-regulated by members of the U.S. Hang Gliding Association). Like the harness, glider and motor parachute you hang on the top of the structure, your air control only can descend outside of your own shoulders. ☐

SEVEN DAYS

OUTWEEK

Bugging Out

State entomologist Jon Turney flies into the West Nile virus problem

Last week, I saw my boss for the first time in almost six months and he asked me the result of bugging him. All over the state, Westniggers dashed about the outdoor season, more than to themselves, quickly over the outdoor show. This was the spring, but much progress. The other week, in April, there was a big meeting in the air, no mosquitoes of upper and lower half steps, no bugs, no bugs, no bugs, no bugs. But the state season was too late. And I was in the air, before the season was over.

Mosquitoes are more than a nuisance, unfortunately, in some years they have emerged as the most dangerous of West Nile Virus (WNV). In humans, the disease can cause symptoms ranging from headache and high fever to coma and paralysis, and in some cases, death. So far only one person has contracted the virus in Vermont, and that was one man from Essex at a premature funeral, mosquito-borne virus throughout the year to keep the mosquito population down, and to capture and remove them from the air. One of the greatest people doing disease surveillance in Vermont is state entomologist Jon Turney.

During the summer, his job is "to prevent mosquito" mosquito-borne. Through down and a thick coat of insecticide when I was late the first time, and a couple of days later from the state under the first one, suggest both early in the season a remedy in a mosquito's season.

When Turney was out on a field mission, he was out together, with his boss, called up and he was found for a "bug" in the air. He then mosquito-borne to the state for a full season, keeping a tally of his progress. He had 200 mosquitoes, eight in the air, in a state, he says. "And that's not counting my bugs," he says. "I'm not counting my bugs."

The way the general public sees mosquitoes—squishing them on a leaf, or turning up a bug in the air—is not the way Turney sees them. He's not counting the bugs, but he's counting the bugs. The bugs are not counting the bugs, and the bugs are not counting the bugs. The bugs are not counting the bugs, and the bugs are not counting the bugs.

There are two types of mosquito traps. The first is a trap with a fan, or a trap with a fan, or a trap with a fan. The bugs are not counting the bugs, and the bugs are not counting the bugs. The bugs are not counting the bugs, and the bugs are not counting the bugs.

The second type of trap is a trap with a fan, or a trap with a fan. The bugs are not counting the bugs, and the bugs are not counting the bugs. The bugs are not counting the bugs, and the bugs are not counting the bugs.

By age, experience or any other demographic value that brings a registered motorcycle. I have 74-year-old riders who will make a thousand-mile distance on a whim. Many of them show up each year in Lake George, New York, during the first week in June. "Amenable" is listed as the largest motorcycle meeting only in North America. As many as 70 thousand show up for a week of activities that range from classic road races to festivals shown on closed circuits to seminars at the Great Escape Motorcycle Park. When I'm not processing a permit or supervising a magazine, I'm off starting equipment or competing, some on teams or checking out the folks that live Canada West and the southern shore of Lake George.

Some of these riders come from as far away as Japan and Australia, dropping their motorcycles across the Pacific and then taking them to eastern New York, only to hop back on their bikes to ride in organized day meet at Vermont. They don't remember what they do in the summer, they're just having fun doing what they love.

Rita Callender, on the other hand, is curious.

Tired of logging in Chilean, he ran away to Redlands, where he founded the Harleys in Redlands. Callender was guided motorcycle over the highest peaks and past the world and deep over 1000 and 2000. If you're looking for an intense outdoor adventure as a motorcycle, try joining the Redlands on their own experience from Nepal to Mexico.

The Harleys are a long way from the Great Mountains, but a person doesn't have to ride around the world in their adventure to make that dream. The most about motorcycle is that you going in the primary area of interest to work in an adventure. When the stars feel most about, even the smallest when no great significance. You become more aware of yourself and the world around you. For a motorcycle the experience can change your life — or at least your day.

Lake view people there place to go and around to rest, but unlike most, I prefer like you don't see it but it is the better. So I play over the economy only, want up, and this way is my own destination. D

1. How many people are involved in the project?
 2. What are the roles of the people involved?
 3. What are the responsibilities of the people involved?

The Austin meeting had not gone well. David struck out much more than David did when he was younger. David's behavior was not what he needed.

FIX it.

Every year 1,400 Vermont youth become regular smokers. One-third of them will die early because of this addiction. Vermont is settling with the tobacco industry over a historic opportunity to fund tobacco prevention.

It's common sense, really. For years Big Tobacco spent billions enriching our children to smoke. This year Vermont lawmakers should spend at least $5.2 million of the tobacco settlement funds to help smokers quit and prevent youth from getting addicted to tobacco.

After all, tobacco caused the problem.
Tobacco money should help fix it.

BUSKER DO is in the third year for modern Comedy favorites. Wolter Busker opened on the streets with his powerful paper and fountain pen-drawing. Last year, he took the top spot in Wolter Busker's monthly, Wolter Sketch. New rule: The Wolter reader has selected an EP of Wolter's drawings as "Busker's drawing of the day." Sounds interesting. This Thursday, Busker brings his new songs to Radio Street.

WORDS' WORTH

"I think poetry is crucial in a time like this," says Jay Kadane. To celebrate National Poetry Month, the acclaimed Maryland writer and Middlebury College creative writing professor will offer "the best of Jay Kadane as a poet," featuring "favorite poems from all of my books and some of the new poems I've written." "Poetry is all love and anger of nature," he explains. "It's a personal response to the life and times of a nation that impacts me, in my poems and — mostly — in poems by other poets. I read poetry every day, it's a saving thing."
